OLD MERCHANT HENRY'S STORE

About Old Merchant Henry's Store

Jan Henrik Nitter Hansen is one of the most successful business men of all time in Western Norway.

One of the properties which he developed his wealth from, is a yellow merchant house at prime location in the old town of Lærdal.

Now this merchant house of 1852 can be your home.

The apartment is situated on the 1st floor, which was Jan Henrik Nitter Hansen's storage rooms in the mid 19-century.

Today the storage rooms are renovated into a luxury apartment with a Oscarian era bedroom, a combined living room/kitchen, a bathroom and a loft with 4 beds.

The storage rooms functions and details are carefully preserved and incorporated into this modern lux-apartment.

Up to 6 persons can stay in the evocative and cozy Henry's Yellow Store.

Background:

The old town of Lærdalsøyri was a busy trade hub and an important port, located at the end of the Sognefjord and at the start of the main route to Oslo and east-Scandinavia (later The King's Road).

Already in the Medieval times the old town of Lærdal was host for the important annual market, the Lærdalsmarknaden. The first time we find the market mentioned, is in 1596. It had been in operation for a long time already.

During the 19 century Lærdal grew to become the most important hub and trading town in north-western Norway next to Bergen. Business grew rapidly, and the father of Jan Henrik started and later Jan Henrik continued the successful business. Jan Henrik was also the mayor of Lærdal for some years and a deputy representative to the Norwegian Parliament.

Old Lærdal is one of Norways most autentic wooden towns, and protected as national heritage.

Henry's Yellow Store is one of the best examples you can find from that time; an typical western-Norwegian merchant house,
